

This year's Colony will feature staged readings of four new plays by our guest artists along with an evening of short plays written throughout the week.

There will also be a public forum examining the needs of a new generation of playwrights, as well as a keynote address from visiting writer John Biguenet.

He will be joined by returning writer Deborah Zoe Laufer, and first-time Colony guest Larissa FastHorse.

Questions, Not Answers

The talk examines moral ambiguity and moral exhaustion as it seeks to understand the task of the playwright. One of the few things of which I am confident these days is that the stage is no place to recite opinions: it is a forum in which a community phrases its most pressing questions. Whether we are considering Antigone or Lear or Mother Courage, we are examining powerfully phrased questions, not answers.
